Walter S. Abbott last week became the happy possessor of a four wheeled vehicle of unquestionable antiquity and regular construction, which although he does not claim it to be contemporaneous with Noah's ark, was evidently built more than a century ago. It is a covered carriage with a setting capacity for only one person or of small size, mounted upon springs and with wooden axles. No maker's name or date of construction has yet been discovered, and the history of this peculiar contrivance is but little known by its present owner, who purchased it last summer from Mr. Edwin Rayson, a prominent citizen of New York, son of Judge Rayson formerly of Hartford, by whom it was used during his Hartford residence for a few years before him for many years. It is a curiosity in the line of carriage architecture and has attracted much attention since its arrival here.
